Financial Services

Consumer financial services have long been the subject of scrutiny and regulation, but financial service providers today face an unprecedented level of regulatory burden. Between increased state regulation and the Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection's (BCFP) vigorous Unfair, Deceptive, or Abusive Acts or Practices (UDAAP) enforcement activity, industry providers must be on alert or else risk steep penalties. In fact, simply reacting to changes in regulatory demands no longer ensures success in this constantly evolving landscape. Businesses must proactively mitigate risk and implement thoughtful compliance programs to avoid finding themselves the target of state and federal actions.

Comprised of former regulators, in-house counsel and seasoned litigators, our team has extensive experience assisting consumer financial service providers of all sizes in navigating these challenging waters. We understand better than most the priorities and perspective of federal and state regulators, and maintain working relationships with these individuals to best represent our clients in matters with their agencies.

We regularly advise debt collectors, money transmitters, auto finance lenders, add-on product providers and other non-depository financial service providers on matters including marketing and advertising practices, privacy issues, and proactive compliance management. We represent our clients in class actions, complex litigation, regulatory enforcement and consumer protection investigation actions. Our experience spans across the plethora of consumer protection laws in the financial services space including FDCPA, FCRA, FACTA, Reg. E, RISA and similar state regulations.

We believe that the best counsel is one that understands the business from inception to great success. Whether you are a startup needing your first set of licenses, an established lender marketing a new consumer product, a debt collector updating your customer contact practices, or responding to an enforcement action, we have the experience needed to see you through every challenge.
